

Digging For Gold: A Story of California

Horatio Alger Jr.(1832 1899), wrote over 100 poems, short stories, and novels during his lifetime, which included four adult novels and one adult novella. He gained notoriety when his friendship with William Taylor Adams, a boys author, changed Algers interest to writing for the juvenile market. His first book for young people, Ragged Dick, or Street Life in New York, was a huge success, securing the authors fame among the youth of America. Digging for Gold: a Story of California, is one of Horatio Algers formula, rags-to-riches books for boys. At sixteen years of age, Grant Colburn is introduced to his new stepfather, a man who could provide well for his family, yet chooses not to. Desperate to make his fortune, and assist his mother, Grant leaves Iowa on a perilous journey for the gold fields of California. Among his many adventures, Grant experiences deprivation; encounters unscrupulous characters; and makes life-long, trustworthy friends. Through his generous nature, and clever mind, Grant is able to aid many of his old friends back home, and secure financial independence for his mother.
