Excerpt: ... CHAPTER XIII AS TO EXPORT BUSINESS AVERY important side of the packing industry, and one that is often overlooked by the layman, is the export business. Without a comprehensive view of the origin, extent, and consequences of our foreign trade in meats, meat products, and meat animals, it is impossible to arrive at a clear understanding of the mutual relations between packers, live stock raisers, and the general public. The export business in meats and meat animals has been a great factor in opening the way for that development of the live stock industry which has completely revolutionized the character of stock raising and farming throughout the West; it has reacted beneficially upon the agricultural interests of the entire country; it has played a part, too, in giving the American people, as a whole, better meats at lower prices than are enjoyed by any other people on earth. It is the export business that absorbs the surplus live stock grown by American cattlemen and farmers, and absorbs those grades of both cattle and meats for which there is but a limited demand at home. The effect of this is twofold. It steadies and supports the home market for live stock, and it moderates the prices of those meats which the American consumer demands; because, without a foreign market for those parts of the beef carcass which the American does not take, the slaughterer would be compelled to ask a higher price for the choice cuts in order to make up for loss on the other parts. If this export business were taken away, or even reduced, the effect of it would be directly felt, not only by the large ranchers and stock raisers, but by every farmer who raises a steer, sheep, or hog for market, and by every one of the
