

The Quarterly Journal of Agriculture, Vol. 6: June 1835 March 1836 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Quarterly Journal of Agriculture, Vol. 6: June 1835 March 1836

The inhabitants of the northern and southern parts of the island of Great Britain have, during more than two centuries, been the subjects of the same king. With the exception of Wales and the Scottish Highlands, they have spoken the same language, and they have professed the same Protestant Christian faith. They both about the same period, under the influence of the principles of Christianity, created by law a compulsory assessment for the relief of their poor. The results of their legislation have been different, in a degree that must afford much subject of speculation to the philosopher, and of instruction to the statesman and the moralist. It would prove unsuitable to this publication, to enter into a detail of the various enactments framed in England and Scotland for the purpose of levying and administering a fund for the support of the poor. It may prove more useful to advert concisely to the prominent features of each of the systems, together with the effects which they have produced. Indeed, were we to give here a detail of enactments, we should have little to say comparatively with regard to Scotland.
