

Report on Fertilization (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Report on FertilizationGentlemen: - During the past year, no less than twenty-five thousand tons of commercial fertilizers have been added to our Hawaiian soils to satisfy the demands of the sugar industry. The initial cost of this large quantity of fertilizing material, added to the cost of distribution and application, makes the subject of fertilization from all economic standpoint one of great importance and worthy of close consideration. The comparative cost of the different manurial compounds, their relative efficacy in meeting the requirements of the cane crop, their proportional liability to waste under given climatic conditions, combined with a knowledge of the soil to which they are to be applied, must constitute the only basis from which any rational and economical system of fertilization can be derived.
