

Theres a Crazy Man Hiding in my Basement!

This is a biographic novel; it is neither a novel nor an autobiographic document. Instead it is simply my story and the things that I wish to share based upon what I have learned. Some of these things may be pleasant, others may not but then all of this is part of life and you have to accept whatever destiny provides. Basically there are many influences in this world that want but one simple thing. It may sound trivial but that is something that we cannot touch or feel or really know much about. That is, power over each of us. Control is like an insatiable hunger borne deeply within the human spirit. That is strange but it is true. This is a story about many people who played a small and large part in my life to understand how they tried to manipulate me. Dont take this statement too lightly because this happens every day to everyone in some way or other. A mother wants to control her son, a wife wants to control her husband and children, a boss wants to control his subordinates, and a priest may want to control his congregation. Of these, a fathers desire to control a son could be the most treacherous of all. Some of these influences are intentionally good and not always bad. This is not to say that these people are all evil but that some of their purposes, whether moral, cultural, ethical, or religious, may not be as pure as one should take at face value. However, in the views of others, these views are correct regardless of your own feelings. We need to look at these considerations very carefully. Alas, the problem is that we may unfortunately have an unsuitable role model such as a father and think that this is all normal, or we may lack the wisdom to fully grasp the implications of this undo influence upon our own existence. How do you know as a child that your father might be broken? He will regardless influence you as the crazy man in your own basement! In life it is very hard to figure what is your purpose in life and how did you make a contribution to society considering all of these competitive views? In other words you could be unduly influenced falsely by your surroundings. However, what is the possibility that you are influenced by society in the big picture? Or possibly, is there a way you could make a contribution or act in a political activity where you influence society? I am an Armenian-American. One thing that I had to understand was by the way people acted to me as a child. They all responded to their environment as they reacted to what they had seen and how they reacted to that stimulus from society. This was something that was horrendous and people did not act proud about this because the events did not achieve any closure, it resulted in an unjust moral situation. When you grew up, you accepted this mental view that you could be helpless against anything that may happen bad to you. Moreover, when you went to work and lost a job, this started to become a familiar trend that seemed to become part of this karma. Others taking away life and death would mean nothing and no one cares. Is this the way society should be right or can we change this mentality to escape away from this darkness and step out into the sunlight? The answer is yes but it is a long tortuous journey. Moreover, you have to learn some very important lessons in life that would be healing as well as changing your approach in dealing with others to grow and make an impact that influences society. When I was in the Army I went to war. Many decades later I served toward the end of my career in four or five wars while serving for the Pentagon. No, I was not a hero. No, I did not receive acknowledgment for my achievements. I just did the best I could and did small things to do what I was supposed to do. I did not have a clear understanding of what these wars were about but there was a grain of morality in each of these activities. Without a doubt, my belief is that all of these wars were designed to fight situations that would prevent
